ardor and sensitiveness at all times and in some numbers she displays even imagination of a poetic tendency.

She was not wise in choosing some of the songs on her programme yesterday. Beethoven's "Gloire I is Nature" (which had another name not long and was a way was had another name not long ago) was much too broad for her breath support, and Debussy's "Mandoline" demanded intervallic nicety not in her grasp. But on the whole her recital was decidedly

NAMARA SINGS WELL.

American Soprano Entertains Large Audience at Acolian Hall. Mme, Marguerite Namara, American soprano, gave her second song recital of the present season last evening in Acolian Hall. Her programme included an air from Mozart's "Le Nozze di an air from Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," two songs by Debussy, groups, one each, by Natalis Townsend and Rudolph Ganz and an English group with Schindler's "Farly Spring." Mme. Namara has a beautiful voice and she shows some progress in using it. There is more freedom of tone than

If there is more freedom of tone than formerise though her scale is still uneven. Her method of interpretation has charm and grace in certain songs, but her style in general is marred by excess of sentiment. One of the Townsend songs, called "Pensee," is dedicated to Mme.
